

INDIGENOUS SCHOLARSHIPS

Bond University is committed to supporting Indigenous Australians by offering a premium tertiary education experience and pathways to exceptional career opportunities. Every year, Bond University offers a range of full and part-fee scholarships to outstanding school-leavers and mature age applicants who have excelled academically or through extracurricular engagement and leadership roles.

Scholarship opportunities include:

- 100% tuition for any diploma program
- 50% tuition for any single undergraduate degree program*

Scholarship applications can be completed online from 23 April to 6 September, 2019. Find out more at bond.edu.au/scholarships or email scholarships@bond.edu.au.

"I grew up in a small Cape York community where I'm related to most of the people who live there, so I really value family-type structures.

I think that's what I like most about Bond. It's a really small university, so you get that real sense of family: in the Nyombil Centre, where I've met Indigenous students from all over Australia; in my classes, where you get more one-on-one attention from teachers, making more meaningful connections with the other students; and in training with my Rugby 7s team mates.

Like family, there's just so much support here for students - academic tutoring if you need it, help with study skills, mentoring and counselling. All you have to do is ask."

DEDICATED SUPPORT

The Nyombil Centre at Bond University provides a welcoming and supportive environment for our extended community of Indigenous students from all over Australia.

Centre Manager, Jason Murray and Indigenous Engagement Advisor, Narelle Urquhart will help you to transition to university life and throughout your degree, as well as helping you connect with the local Indigenous community who welcome our students at various cultural and social events.

Our scholarships also open the door to a network of extracurricular programs, professional networking, internships and more.

Our Indigenous Scholarship program is supported by funds raised at the annual Bond University Indigenous Gala and by the generosity of our corporate partners:
